To whom it may concern,

I am writing in response to the "Rock in Prevention" program that we had at our school. I have received nothing but positive comments from anyone who attended this assembly. It was very well put together and interactive. The music, mentors, and role playing helped deliver the message to a variety of students that "we don't do that here" in terms of bullying.

As an administrator, I love the simple, yet effective "we don't do that here" phrase. I have used it several times when dealing with discipline since the program. I have been able to use that phrase and refresh their memory of the message that was presented.

Our student body responded to the music and interactive dancing that was done throughout the program. Learning through music is a great way to help students remember an important message. The students were all given a copy of the CD with the songs they learned that day. I have heard a parent say that they have been listening to it nonstop in their car since they got it!

Having older student mentors was a fabulous idea! They are role models for the younger students and played an active role in engaging the kids. They put a positive spin on the assembly and got the kids excited!

I would definitely recommend this program for your school in promoting a positive school climate and discouraging bullying behavior. It is a great, interactive assembly that will leave you singing their praises!

Sincerely,
